

Shaping your water future in the Abingdon area - 20 February, 7-8:30 pm

In the next 25 years we are expecting a significant increase in the number people in our area. With a third more water used today than 30 years ago and energy prices set to rise, we are determined to speak to as many people as possible about our draft water plans and long term strategy.

Our customers are being invited to have their say on how the company should keep up with growing demand for water services at an open event in their area. You will have a face-to-face opportunity to find out more about what happens in your local area and help influence our plans for the future.

The forum will provide an opportunity to have your say on our draft Water Resource Management Plan and draft Business Plan and make suggestions on how the company can improve services both now and for future generations.

Topics up for discussion will be wide ranging, and will include how best to provide water and waste services locally, reflecting a growing population, adapting to climate change, water resources, flood risk, customer bills and new technology

Our local water and wastewater specialists will also be on hand to answer questions you may have about your local water treatment works and local sewage works.
